REFLECTION:

To host my application on Github, I first signed-in to my already existing account on Github. Then, as I was redirected to the homepage, I clicked the plus sign on the upper-leftmost side of the page and clicked on “Create Repository”. After the repository was created, I simply uploaded my files. I didn’t face any challenges other than poor internet connectivity.

Cloud hosting will make my project more useful to others by making it more accessible. I’m able to upload multiple projects and sharing such projects is easier through cloud hosting. More people will also be able to view and access my projects with little to no difficulties. And because it is uploaded to the cloud, I won’t have to worry about losing them.
